“No field needs a new paradigm more than healthcare, which is exactly what Gunderson and Cochrane offer us in this timely volume. Here are carefully wrought ideas on which to build partnerships across the disciplines and specialties that now divide hospitals from community, so necessary to advance population health. Administrators, physicians, policy makers, and community leaders should welcome this as a way to move forward—together.”

—Bob Waller, ex-CEO and president of the Mayo Clinic, Board of Directors of the Institute for Health Improvement, Cambridge, MA

“Religion and the Health of the Public is a remarkable book in its broad academic scope combined with a focused argument about public health and religious communities. To anyone interested in salutogenic conceptions of health, it is mandatory reading.”

—Ola Sigurdson, professor and director of the Centre for Culture and Health, University of Gothenburg

“Drawing on the moral commitments and empirical insights of religion and public health in Africa and the United States, this groundbreaking and inspiring book also engages the connection of religion and the health of the public.”

—Abdulláh A. An-Na’im, Charles Howard Candler Professor of Law, Emory University
In memory of Steve and in gratitude to the many warm friends and colleagues with whom we have journeyed along the way from the Interfaith Health Program, the African Religious Health Religious Health Assets Programme and the Center of Excellence for Faith and Health.
CONTENTS

List of Figures ix
List of Acronyms xi
Acknowledgments xiii
Foreword xvii

1 Seeing Differently: Changing the Paradigm of the Health of the Public 1

2 The Health of the Public and the Religious Mind: Connections and Disconnections 21

3 Religious Health Assets: What Religion Brings to Health of the Public 41

4 Leading Causes of Life: Pathology in Its Place 59

5 Seeking Health: Persons, Bodies, and Choices 81

6 People Who Congregate: Building on Strengths 99

7 Boundary Leadership: Embodying Complexity in Turbulence 119

8 The Challenge of Systems 141

9 Religion and the Health of the Public: Deep Accountability 159

Notes 171
Bibliography 197
Index 213